

Student Demographic- Neurological Level Questioning

Adults, who may be native English speakers or where English may not be their first language.

The majority will be invested in learning the subject matter although there may be students who may still be classified as ``visitors``.

There may be a significant percentage of learners who view themselves as expert or knowledgeable in the field of coaching which will impact negatively on their level of engagement to try on new and novel concepts.

The vast majority will be habituated to focus on asking a specific type of question which will impair their ability to integrate concepts.

While many will be professionals, there will be students with lower levels of education and experience working with people. The spread ranges from individuals with great experience and education in the human services field to none.

Although students have computer and internet, their technical skill level and experience ranges from expert with much experience learning online to novices experiencing their first online training, often lacking some of the basic hardware such as a headset.
